FEATURED STORIES

Editorial
Ellen Immergut, Director of BGSS

Dissertation Projects
Anna Schwenck: Movements in Service of the Powerful - Understanding Participation in pro-Kremlin Youth Organizations

Events and Projects

Andreas Schäfer: 3rd Berlin Summer School in Social Sciences – Linking Theory and Empirical Research - Program Information

Martin Nagelschmidt, BGSS Academic Manager: Introduction of the new BGSS Team

Alumni Occupations
Anne Busch: Junior Professorship at Universität Hamburg

BGSS Blackboard
Please find upcoming events here.

New Members
Guests

Scientific Output
Publications, Conference presentations

PLEASING TO REPORT

Dr. Christine Hentschel has been awarded the Heinz Maier-Leibnitz Prize 2013.

Specializing in urban and regional sociology at the Institute of Social Sciences at Humboldt University of Berlin, Hentschel is one of nine award winners elected by the German Research Foundation and the Federal Ministry of Education and Research from 123 candidates. Christine Hentschel has worked at the Humboldt University Berlin since 2011. As a postdoctoral fellow she leads a group of young researchers supported by the Einstein Foundation Berlin. The Berlin Einstein Group is hosted by the Berlin Graduate School of Social Sciences.
Dear members, partners, and friends of the Berlin Graduate School of Social Sciences,

The break between semesters has been particularly busy this year. Not only one, but two admissions committees met to discuss the 142 BGSS/SESS and 92 EDP (European Doctoral Programme) applications. We are pleased to announce that we have now chosen our incoming class for 2013, comprised of 9 BGSS/SESS and 3 (Berlin-based) EDP students, and we are excited about the high quality of their research proposals. Our next step has been to develop tailor-made assistance for individual applications for scholarships in the German funding system (social and political foundations, etc.). Moreover, BGSS faculty and staff have submitted several applications for minidocoral programs and research groups with PhD positions. Thanks to our partners at the DIW and WZB and through university funding of part of the EDP, a first group of admitted students has already been allocated fellowships or doctoral positions. We now have our fingers crossed that our funding applications under review will be successful.

As outlined in this newsletter, our Summer Semester has a number of interesting activities for doctoral researchers, post-docs, faculty, and staff. For example, we have introduced a common theme for the Brown Bag lecture series: the politics and sociology of migration. The first lecture was given by Virginie Guiraudon of Sciences Politiques on April 23rd. On June 12th and July 10th, Magdalena Nowicka - who joins the ISW as an ERC Grantee - and Yasemin Soysal from the University of Essex will join us. At the beginning of the semester, the BGSS-Sciences Po-UCLA Migration Network met. This event, organized by Gökce Yurdakul and Marc Helbling (who will be joining the BGSS faculty), included a day of graduate workshops and a keynote session with talks by Roger Waldinger and Ruud Koopmans. In addition, we were very happy to have Adrian Favell and Gail Kligman join us. Future meetings are planned for 2014 (Paris), 2015 (LA), and 2016 (Berlin). The annual workshop of our second gradateresearchers’ network - GradNet, which links EUI, CEU, LSE, Science Po, SUM, IHS and BGSS - was held London right before the begin of the semester. Seven BGSS members participated at this workshop. During the course of this semester, we will host workshops on Transnational German Studies and Relational Sociology - including guest lectures by Ron Breiger, John Mohr, and John Padgett. Finally, as you will read in this newsletter, the Berlin Summer School on Linking Theory and Empirical Research 2013 has received more than 200 applications - a further sign of the attractiveness and high quality of the summer school.

I wish everyone an interesting and productive semester!
Every summer thousands of young Russians travel to Lake Seliger to participate in the so-called All-Russian Youth Forum. They camp in tents, do morning exercise, and engage in projects ranging from urban development and social media to patriotic education and entrepreneurial training. Initially, the camp was the main gathering for members of Nashi (The Ours), a group which was founded by Kremlin officials to prevent upheavals in Russia similar to the Ukrainian Orange Revolution. Nashi caused a number of controversies within and outside of Russia through attention-grabbing actions that were directed against oppositional figures, foreign embassies, and unfavorable news coverage. In recent years, however, the organization underwent several restructurings and was recently rebranded. In a similar vein, Seliger, as the summer camp is often called, was opened to all Russian youth. Today it promotes a pro-governmental version of civic engagement, which is thought to strengthen a new Russian patriotism, entrepreneurialism, and the government’s ideology of Managed Democracy.

It is important to note that membership in all pro-governmental formations (Nashi is only one of several organizations) is voluntary – in contrast to the Komsomol during Soviet times. Although groups are often created by state officials and politicians loyal to the government, they depend on the support and participation of the youth. There is an assumption in much of the literature on the phenomenon that participation is self-explanatory: Participants are either portrayed as non-political, but interested in material and career assets or as fully committed supporters of governmental policies. The present PhD project aims to explore how members conceive of their engagement. What may seem as a rather homespun and at times self-defeating mishmash of Soviet symbols, democratic catchwords, market liberal spirit, and patriotic proclamation, might sound less contradictory to participants who share a very different understanding of what the employed terms and concepts mean. Moreover, members have to somehow relate to this kind of ideology even though they pursue career opportunities in politics or business.

Studying the patterns of rationales for participation in Russian pro-governmental youth organizations adds to our understanding of what actions these youths regard as meaningful and what kind of worldview informs their choices. I further explore the change of meaning that some Soviet symbols and terms, but also liberal-democratic catchwords underwent within the past decade. Studying participants’ motivation might be also telling with regard to the popular support (and its waning) of recent political developments in post-socialist Russia. Not at least, some scholars still regard political apathy as the major cultural and mass psychological source for the Russian government’s political legitimacy and stability. Contrary to that still dominant view, mobilization and activism of all kinds have spread considerably in the past decade, and the very existence of pro-Kremlin groups hints at the government’s desire to increase favorable civic engagement.

I plan to explore the motivations and justifications of participants through the techniques of narrative interviewing and participant observation. The Seliger camp will be one site of fieldwork, although I hope to also gain access to groups in provincial cities. Depending on which organizations exist on the local level, variation between the provinces will likely be higher with regard to youth’s political socialization.
What is the link between Einstein and Nylon? There is none, you say? Well, there is. It’s not that Albert Einstein invented the synthetic polymer known as Nylon – you are right, that was Wallace Carothers. In fact, this guess would be nowhere near: Nylon (read: NYLON) and Einstein, a shorthand for ‘the Einstein Group’, constitute a transatlantic research network – and a very active one, indeed. The network’s annual conference that took place at the London School of Economics from March 16 to 18, 2013 was the most recent occasion where participants from both sides of the Atlantic met and discussed their work. It was superbly organized and a great success!

But let us explain. NYLON was created in 2001 by Craig Calhoun and Richard Sennett of New York University and the London School of Economics. What started out as a research network between these two universities has since expanded beyond its original boundaries – NYLON now includes young scholars from Goldsmiths, Cambridge, and Kent in the UK; from Chicago, Columbia University, CUNY, and the New School in the US; and – since 2011, facilitated by Craig Calhoun’s Einstein Fellowship – from Humboldt, Freie, and Technical University as well as the Max Planck Institute for Human Development in Berlin. This latter group calls itself the ‘Berlin Einstein Group’ and meets every week at the Berlin Graduate School of Social Sciences throughout the semester. These three groups – members from New York City, London, and Berlin – hold conferences in one of these three cities once a year. These annual meetings do not just differ from ordinary conferences because they invite young scholars to freely discuss their work-in-progress and to debate the role of the social sciences in society in a unique manner; both the formats and the contents are quite exceptional. This

One question that remains after the conference and that has generated some debate regards the research network’s name. It is not easy to fuse ‘Nylon’ and the ‘Berlin Einstein Group’ into a catchy acronym. Berlony? Berlynors? Nylon-B? What this conference in London has shown, however, is that the lack of a common name is perhaps not a hindrance. This research network is vibrant and fosters collaborations and friendships that transcend disciplinary and methodological boundaries and that persist outside the regular meetings. And this is quite something.
This year, for the third summer, the BGSS and the WZB are jointly hosting the Berlin Summer School in Social Sciences. From the 14th to 26th July 2013, about 50 young researchers from all over the world will meet with renowned international and Berlin-based scholars to discuss and work on methodological issues and challenges that arise when linking theory and empirical social research.

The summer school encompasses a varied format of lectures, workshops, seminars, and meetings. A special emphasis is given to the implementation and methodological consideration of participants’ research designs - With this program the Berlin Summer School in Social Sciences aims to promote young researchers by strengthening their ability to produce theoretically and methodologically innovative social research.

The school brings together a faculty of renowned international and Berlin-based scholars. Among the confirmed international lecturers are Mark Bevir (UC Berkeley), Gary Goertz (University of Notre Dame), Guillermina Jasso (New York University), Kenneth Bollen (The University of North Carolina at Chapel Hill), Mario Small (University of Chicago), and Loic Wacquant (UC Berkeley).

The first week of the program addresses topics such as the epistemological foundations of methodological paradigms, strategies of concept building, the combination of theoretical micro- and macro-perspectives, as well as the nature of causation and the problem of explanation in the social sciences. In the second week, these methodological considerations are applied to four central empirical fields of research in political science and sociology: “Comparing Democracies: Political Competition, Democratic Institutions, and Public Policies”, “Social Inequality, Conflict, and Integration”, “The Dynamics of National and International Regimes”, and “Knowledge and Culture in a Globalized World”.

For more information, please visit our webpage at www.berlinsummerschool.de.

Contact for further questions: Andreas Schäfer
Email: andreas.schaefer.1@sowi.hu-berlin.de.
BGSS management functions have been refocused and clustered around a smaller management team with Martin Nagelschmidt (Academic Manager), Jana Rieckmann (International Doctoral Services), Christoph Raiser (International Relations Manager) and Thomas Wosnitza (Finance and Personnel Administration/Science Marketing). The former function of office secretary is jointly assumed by our student assistants Manon Vollprecht (Monday), Maria Keil (Thursday and Friday) and by Thomas Wosnitza (Tuesday and Wednesday). This new team is working in a flexible and output-oriented way in order to meet the challenges faced by the BGSS until the end of 2014.

BGSS Functions - Overview

<table>
<thead>
<tr>
<th>International Doctoral Services</th>
<th>International Relations Manager</th>
<th>Academic Manager BGSS</th>
<th>Finance and Personnel Administration</th>
<th>Science Marketing</th>
</tr>
</thead>
<tbody>
<tr>
<td>Student Services</td>
<td>International Funding Programs</td>
<td>Consultant BGSS Director</td>
<td>Funding Administration</td>
<td>Website Development and Administration</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Selection Process</td>
<td>Consortia and Bilateral Cooperations</td>
<td>Management BGSS Governance</td>
<td>Funding Management</td>
<td>Marketing and Communication Strategy</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Scholarship Advice</td>
<td>Joint PhD Curricula Scholarship Advice</td>
<td>Update of BGSS Functions and Academic Mission</td>
<td>Research Stays, Conferences, Workshop and Summer School Funding</td>
<td>Newsletter</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Track Record</td>
<td></td>
<td>Funding Strategy and Financial Management</td>
<td>Reporting on Expenditure of Funds</td>
<td>BGSS Events</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Organisation of BGSS Curriculum and Workshops</td>
<td></td>
<td>Director Management Unit</td>
<td></td>
<td></td>
</tr>
</tbody>
</table>
From 2008 to 2012 I was a PhD candidate in the Sess. EuroPhD program at the BGSS and funded by the program’s scholarship. During this period I was also doing research on gender income inequalities in managerial positions with a focus on gender segregation as the main determinant, together with Dr. Elke Holst at the SOEP department of the German Institute for Economic Research (DIW) in Berlin. Furthermore, I worked as a research assistant in the project ‘From Heterogeneities to Inequalities, sub-project Gender-Specific Patterns of Opportunity in Employment’ (SFB 882) at the Bielefeld University. Together with my colleagues Dr. Katrin Golsch and Miriam Bröckel, our research was focused on gender-specific employment biographies, transitions, and disadvantages as well as career paths in partnerships, and drew heavily on the German Socio-Economic Panel Study. In May 2012 I obtained my doctorate with the defense of my PhD thesis (Title: ‘Die berufliche Geschlechtersegregation in Deutschland – Ursachen, Reproducicion, Folgen’ – ‘Occupational Sex Segregation in Germany – Causes, Reproduction, Consequences’, first supervisor: Prof. Dr. Bernd Wegener; second supervisor: Prof. Dr. Jürgen Schupp).

Following my defense, I accepted a junior professorship in sociology (in particular labor, organization, gender) at the Faculty of Economic and Social Sciences, Department of Socioeconomics, at the University of Hamburg and started my work on October 1st, 2012. My main task is to do research and teaching on the topic of labor market and gender research as well as organizational sociology. I give lectures and seminars in the bachelor’s degree program ‘Socioeconomics’ and in the master’s degree program ‘Economic and Sociological Studies’. Moreover, research gender-related issues of labor market and occupational research with special regard to the causes and consequences of gender segregation in occupations. The empirical focus is on quantitative methods and the combination of information provided by secondary data sets. I work a lot with the data from the Microcensus and the Employment Survey of the Federal Institute for Occupational Safety and Health (BAnA) and the Federal Institute for Vocational Education and Training (BiBB) with data from the German Socio-Economic Panel Study. My theoretical focus is on the linkage of supply-side and institutional-side theories with social psychological theories of status as well as organizational theories. In addition, I jointly undertake research activities with colleagues from the University of Hamburg, Bielefeld University, and the German Institute for Economic Research (DIW)/SOEP department. I am also actively participating in the university’s self-administration, such as in the examination board of the bachelor’s degree program ‘Socioeconomics’. I also write reports for journals and give or comment on talks at scientific meetings.

The BGSS/Sess.EuroPhD has been a great support in my professional career, not only by funding my research period abroad at the Stanford University and participation at various international conferences, but also by providing scientific support in the form of colloquia, workshops, and other events.
BROWN BAG LECTURES
WEDNESDAYS, 12-2 C.T. ROOM 004, UNI3B

JUNE 12
Magdalena Nowicka (ERC Project Director)
Transforming Migration: Transnational Transfer of Multicultural Habitus

JULY 10
Yasemin Soysal (University of Essex)
Citizenship and Immigration in Europe: Failing Human

BGSS WORKSHOP FOR WORK-IN-PROGRESS
TUESDAYS, 4-6PM, LUISENSTR. 56, ROOM 123

MAY 7

MAY 14
Nadja Douglas (2011)
Civil-military relations in Russia - why shifting to an all-volunteer force continues to be problematic
Discusant: Julian Brückner

MAY 21
Frederike Esche (2010)
Mine, yours or our problem? Analyzing the effects of unemplyoment on partnerships

MAY 28
Tarik Abou-Chadi (2011) & Matthias Orlowski (2010)
Assessing the causal effect of suffrage extension on government spending and redistribution - the effect of political institutions

JUNE 4
Evin Deniz, Autonomous University of Madrid (Guest)
A struggle against displacement as a politicization process of the dwellers of Dikmen Valley/Ankara/Turkey

JUNE 25
Julia Nast (2011)

JULY 2
Julian Brückner (2010)
From Military Dictatorship to Democratic Consolidation: Breaking the Civil-Military Path Dependence in Latin America
Discusant: Nadja Douglas

July 9
Jan Ullrich (2011)

BGSS WORKSHOPS AND CONFERENCES

APRIL 4 - 5
Introduction to R, Matthias Orlowski, Workshop
9.30am - 5pm, Universitätsstr. 3b, PC-Pool

APRIL 8
Migration Workshop, Plenary Panel
Migration, Citizenship and Transnational Politics: Comparative Perspectives of Western Europe and North America
Keynote Speakers: Roger Waldinger (UCLA), Ruud Koopmans, (WZB); Partners: UC-LA, Sciences Po, WZB, BGSS
5 - 7pm, Luisenstr. 56, Festsaal

MAY 23 - 26
Graduate Workshop in Transnational German Studies, Berlin-Workshop
Main Organisers: Universits of Warwick, Institute of Advanced Study (IAS), University of Michigan, HU Berlin
Times and Location will be annouced on www.bgss.hu-berlin.de soon!

MAY 27
Relational Sociology: Reconstructing Networks with Meaning
Keynote Speakers: Ronald Breiger (University of Arizona), John Mohr (University of California at Santa Barbara)
John Padgett (University of Chicago)
Workshop 10am - 6pm, registration required (more info at www.bgss.hu-berlin.de)
Discussion (open to public) 6pm - 8pm, Luisenstr. 56, 10117 Berlin, Haus 1, Festsaal

SPECIALS

JULY 14 - 26
3rd Berlin Summerschool in Social Sciences (BGSS/WZB)
Linking Theory and Empirical Research

JUNE 8
Lange Nacht der Wissenschaften, Berlin | Potsdam
BGSS Info Desk, Presentation of Dissertation Topics
4 - 12 pm, Luisenstr. 56, 10117 Berlin, Room 123
NEW MEMBERS

GUESTS

Deniz, Evin
April 2013 - June 2013
The Social Production of Urban Space: A Comparison of Two Cases from Madrid and Ankara
PUBLICATIONS

Bebedovsky, Natalia

Daphi, Priska, Britta Baumgarten, and Peter Ullrich
Protest | Culture: Conceptualizing Culture in Social Movement Research (forthcoming).

Konieczny, Esther, and Falk Tennert
„Reputationskonstitution und Verantwortungsattribution in Krisen: Der Fall Toyota“.

Konieczny, Esther, and Marita Verbali
„Kommunikationsereignisanalytik »Libanonkrieg«. Berichterstattungsdynamik und Darstellung der Konfliktparteien“. fög research papers (2008).

Krüger, Anne
„Forschungsbericht zu Transitional Justice“. Jahrbuch für Politik und Geschichte 3

Rösler, Wiebke, and Hans Bertram

Rösler, Wiebke, Martin Bujard, and Hans Bertram

Rösler, Wiebke, Steffen Kohl, and Hans Bertram

Moormann-Kimáková, Barbora
Language regimes in multinational and multiethnic settings

Söyler, Mehtap
The Historical-Institutional Path of the Deep State and Democratic Consolidation in Turkey

Uçar-Ruf, Helin
Challenges of Norm Implementation: The Interaction between State and Non-state Actors Regarding Violence against Women in Turkey

SUBMISSIONS

Moormann-Kimáková, Barbora
Language regimes in multinational and multiethnic settings

Söyler, Mehtap
The Historical-Institutional Path of the Deep State and Democratic Consolidation in Turkey

Uçar-Ruf, Helin
Challenges of Norm Implementation: The Interaction between State and Non-state Actors Regarding Violence against Women in Turkey

DEFENSES

Dreger, Jonas
A Climate for Expertise? How the European Commission uses knowledge strategically in the making of European climate and energy policy

Konieczny, Esther
Context matters? Discursive power in transnational public spheres.

Krüger, Anne K.
The global diffusion of truth commissions as a collective learning process. A contribution to the microfoundation of organizational research

Nassauer, Anne
Violence in demonstrations. A comparative analysis of situational interaction dynamics at social movement protests.

Walther, Ulf
Intelligence Services in Eastern Europe